Community services

Technology is being adopted in the community services sector in a variety of ways, including electronic documentation, client records, account management and monitoring client health.

Technology has been developed to assist wheelchair users to track journeys and access interactive maps – providing greater freedom of movement. Technology is also used for recording and monitoring movement habits of people who are elderly or infirmed. This can provide vital information to support personnel about physical activity and mobility of individuals in their care.